This article presents the implementation of a maintenance application for cellular switching system using the multi-agent paradigm. The main philosophy behind the design of the multi-agent system is based on the TMN framework, where each agent can mapped with one or several TMN functional blocks. Ubiquitous computing is an attempt to simplify human-computer interaction by embedding computational power in everyday objects. The resulting technology is distributed yet invisible. This approach offers an appealing alternative to current complex user interfaces. However, invisible technology by itself may be unacceptable to most users. If ubiquitous computing is to gain acceptance, it must provide a seamless manual override mechanism and meaningful diagnostics. Our implementation of a computer- ...

The design and implementation of a Scientific User Interface is presented. Written in the C language, SUI is a window-menu-mouse oriented graphical user interface that is designed to provide a modern and integrated computing environment for scientific work. SUI can serve multiple client systems in parallel including symbolic, numeric, graphics and document formatting systems. SUI achieves hardware and operating system independence as well as network transparency by employing the X11 protocol ...

In many situations, embedded menus represent an attractive alternative to the more traditional explicit menus, particularly in touchtext, spelling checkers, language-based program editors, and graphics-based systems.

9 The integrality of speech in multimodal interfaces

A framework of complementary behavior has been proposed which maintains that direct-manipulation and speech interfaces have reciprocal strengths and weaknesses. This suggests that user interface performance and acceptance may increase by adopting a multimodal approach that combines speech and direct manipulation. This effort examined the hypothesis that the speed, accuracy, and acceptance of multimodal speech and direct-manipulation interfaces will increase when the modalities match the per ...
